FIRST ICE CREAM SOLD BY MAIER

John G. Maier (1810-1880) came to Fort Wayne in 1845 from Circleville, Ohio, and for a number of years operated the Maier Grocery on Columbia Street. He was Fort Wayne postmaster from 1852 to 1860, and also served as township trustee.

Maier raised and distributed the first strawberries in Allen County and introduced here the first musical instruments and toys. He was the first to sell ice cream in Fort Wayne, and the first to press grape wine for commercial purposes. Maier's wine was used for some years in the sacrament of communion at Trinity English Lutheran Church.

Mr. Maier died July 4, 1880. Funeral services were conducted at the family homestead, 78 South Lafayette, by Rev. Samuel Wagenhals. The Maier family rests in Lindenwood, one of the Nation's great historic cemeteries, where there will be adequate burial facilities for generations to come.

Notes

1. The first part of the paper discusses the importance of understanding the underlying mechanisms of the system. This is followed by a detailed description of the experimental setup and the results of the initial tests. The authors then present a series of experiments designed to test the hypothesis that the system is self-organizing. The results of these experiments are presented in a series of graphs and tables, which show that the system does indeed exhibit self-organizing behavior. The authors conclude that the system is a complex, self-organizing system that is capable of adapting to changing conditions.

2. The second part of the paper discusses the implications of the results for the design of control systems. The authors argue that the results suggest that a control system should be designed to be robust to changes in the system parameters. This is followed by a discussion of the design of a control system that is capable of adapting to changes in the system parameters. The authors conclude that the results suggest that a control system should be designed to be robust to changes in the system parameters.

3. The third part of the paper discusses the implications of the results for the design of control systems. The authors argue that the results suggest that a control system should be designed to be robust to changes in the system parameters. This is followed by a discussion of the design of a control system that is capable of adapting to changes in the system parameters. The authors conclude that the results suggest that a control system should be designed to be robust to changes in the system parameters.

4. The fourth part of the paper discusses the implications of the results for the design of control systems. The authors argue that the results suggest that a control system should be designed to be robust to changes in the system parameters. This is followed by a discussion of the design of a control system that is capable of adapting to changes in the system parameters. The authors conclude that the results suggest that a control system should be designed to be robust to changes in the system parameters.

5. The fifth part of the paper discusses the implications of the results for the design of control systems. The authors argue that the results suggest that a control system should be designed to be robust to changes in the system parameters. This is followed by a discussion of the design of a control system that is capable of adapting to changes in the system parameters. The authors conclude that the results suggest that a control system should be designed to be robust to changes in the system parameters.

6. The sixth part of the paper discusses the implications of the results for the design of control systems. The authors argue that the results suggest that a control system should be designed to be robust to changes in the system parameters. This is followed by a discussion of the design of a control system that is capable of adapting to changes in the system parameters. The authors conclude that the results suggest that a control system should be designed to be robust to changes in the system parameters.

The Rev. John Sjaugen (upper left) stands each Sunday morning in the same spot from which noted author Lloyd C. Douglas delivered his first sermon — the pulpit at Marquardt Lutheran Church near Monroeville. The little church maintains its quaint trappings and devoted following after 95 years of service.

Sculptor Norman Klages (above) explains once again how he models his small figures. He's starting to make the alligator (above right), this time complete with a passenger who is the subject of a demonstration of how to make curly hair. A lineup (right) of some of Klages' Wild West people, Indians, cowboys, prospectors and mountain men show how individual and expressive each of his people is.

PHILLIP

MARQUARDT, T

Not too far east of Fort Wayne — and set among tall, toothpick-like elms which stretch to touch the top of its weather-worn steeple — is a little church. To the casual passerby, the building brings to mind snatches of childhood poems about lovely little churches in the country. To the 50 or so countryfolk who belong there, however, Marquardt Lutheran Church holds a much deeper meaning.

For one thing, the one-room building, at the corner of Hoffman and Grotrian rds. near Monroeville, is 95 years and two renovations old — yet services are still held regularly there.

Neither Marquardt's picturesqueness nor its age nor its size, though, are what its faithful like to brag on most. Rather, it is the fact that Lloyd C. Douglas, nationally known author of "The Robe," "Magnificent Obsession" and "Green Light," to name a few titles, preached his first sermon there.

Church member Mrs. Ray Houser likes to relate an incident that happened during that sermon: "Old Jake Marquardt's granddaughter was crying, and the mother just picked her right up and put her on her hip and carried her up to the front of the church. And, of course, Mr. Douglas didn't know quite what to think of it. And the mother picked up a glass of water (intended for the speaker) and gave it to the baby, then went back to her seat."

That's pretty much the way Douglas tells it, too, in his memoirs, "Time to Remember," except he adds: "I still wish, after more than a half-century, that I had been human enough to share the Marquardts' merriment that day, but I was only a scared rookie, serving my novitiate in a serious trade."

Marquardt Lutheran Church, an affiliate of the Indiana-Kentucky Synod of the Lutheran Church of America, was as new to the Monroeville farm community then as Douglas was to the ministry. According to a church history compiled last year, the cornerstone was laid in 1882 by six Lutheran families whose efforts to establish a Sunday School expanded into construction of the $3,000 church. The 32-by-59 foot building was raised by hand labor. It was named for Phillip Marquardt, the leading fundraiser.

Several renovations, repairs and appointments have been made since then, including the installment of a new Gulbrandsen organ last Summer. The church is still without a septic tank, but the members are trying to obtain one. The two-stall outhouse on the property serves well enough for weekly services.

When the tower bell chimes every Sunday at 9 a.m., it's now the Rev. John Sjaugen who usually stands at the pulpit. A semi-retired minister who also serves as a parish visitor for Trinity English Lutheran Church in Fort Wayne, Rev. Sjaugen is the latest in a long line of "supply pastors" and has been conducting services at Marquardt since April. It has been at least 10 years since the little church has had an installed clergyman.

"Everybody is a volunteer here," says Mrs. Sjaugen, and that includes the pastor as well as the organist and the Sunday School teacher. The congregation itself serves as a volunteer group in the community. Some of its beneficiaries include fire veterans, the Allen County Cancer Society, Parkview Hospital and the Monroeville Emergency Medical Services.

"They (the congregation) are a group of most dedicated people," says Mrs. Sjaugen. Indeed, church member Mrs. Irvin Hoffman reports few problems with Sunday attendance. If a member is absent, she says, someone from the congregation usually inquires if an emergency or serious illness is the cause.

"So you can see this is a family church," Mrs. Sjaugen says. That statement is supported by the cemetery behind the church, where nearly all of the 40 or so tombstones display the same seven or eight surnames.

A family church, a historical church, a tiny church, an old church — Marquardt Lutheran is all of these — and still the "lovely little church in the country." □

Mass celebrated in Indian village as early as 1676, historians think

First in a series on the Catholic Church.
By DICK ISENHOUR
Of The News-Sentinel

What little we know of the early days of the Catholic Church in Fort Wayne we owe to the Indians who inhabited this region more than 300 years ago.

St. Mary's Catholic Church, 430 E. Jefferson Blvd., was the city's first German-language Catholic church.

The French Jesuit missionaries who first visited this area when it was still wilderness in the mid-1600s, took very few notes of their labors.

According to Indian tradition, however, it is believed one such missionary visited the Miami Indian village of Kekionga as early as 1676. And it was during this year, historians believe, the first Mass was celebrated, in a French post located near what is now the west end of Superior Street and the north side of the Van Buren Street bridge.

There's not much on the record for the next 200 years, although it is known the Jesuits stopped here regularly as they made their rounds throughout the region.

The written record of the Catholic Church in Fort Wayne begins in 1830, when the few Catholics who resided here at the time were visited by the Rev. Stephen Badin on June 3. Badin was the Vicar General of the diocese of Bardstown, Ky., (of which Fort Wayne was a part), and was the first priest ordained in the United States.

The following year, the first recorded mass in the city was celebrated in the home of Francis Comparet, with Badin officiating. The priest also conducted the first recorded marriage ceremony in February of that year.

In 1837, St. Augustine's, the city's first Catholic church was constructed on the site where the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception now stands.

It was later moved across the street when construction on the Cathedral began.

A decade later, 30 German families wanted to form a church where the gospel would be preached in their own language. So they purchased some lots on the corner of Lafayette and Jefferson streets and formed the St. Mary's parish.

Five members of the German community — Bernard Meyer, Nicholas Jostvert, Henry and Lucas Hoevel, and Bernard Voors — mortgaged their farms to raise the $1,700 to purchase the lots. The building was completed in November 1848, and on Nov. 29, the 30 German families moved in procession from St. Augustine's to St. Mary's for the dedication of the church.

Rev. F.X. Weninger, a missionary, conducted the entry into the church, calling it "Mother of God Church."

That first building measured 32 by 64 feet and was used until 1858, when construction on a second building was completed. The second church was twice as large as the first.

Disaster struck St. Mary's on Jan. 13, 1866. At 1:15 p.m. on this infamous day, a boiler in the basement exploded, killing Anton Evans, the janitor. A 13-year-old girl named Alberta Williams also was killed as she walked by the building. The explosion ripped the building and a flying door struck the girl.

The church was completely wrecked and the remaining walls had to be razed. Church members did not lose faith, however, and within months had completed plans for a new church. On July 11, 1886, the cornerstone of the new building was laid by Bishop Dwenger and work begun on the new $100,000 structure.

The new church, built in Gothic architecture with three main steeples, one rising 230 feet, was dedicated the Third Sunday of Advent in 1887.

The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the general principles of the theory of the structure of the atom. It is shown that the structure of the atom is determined by the laws of quantum mechanics, and that the laws of quantum mechanics are in agreement with the experimental facts. The second part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the structure of the nucleus. Scarred manse once estate of national leader Hugh McCulloch

The McCulloch Home, in the 600 block of West Superior Street, is a shattered mansion, scarred with broken or boarded windows, cracked walls and weed-strewn grounds. There is little about it today that reflects the grandeur of the place when it was built 140 years ago.

The McCulloch homestead originally was a splendid example of the Greek Revival style in architecture, and it well represented then, along with the newly built Hamilton Homestead and the soon-to-be-built Hanna home, the new wealth of Fort Wayne's leading pioneers.

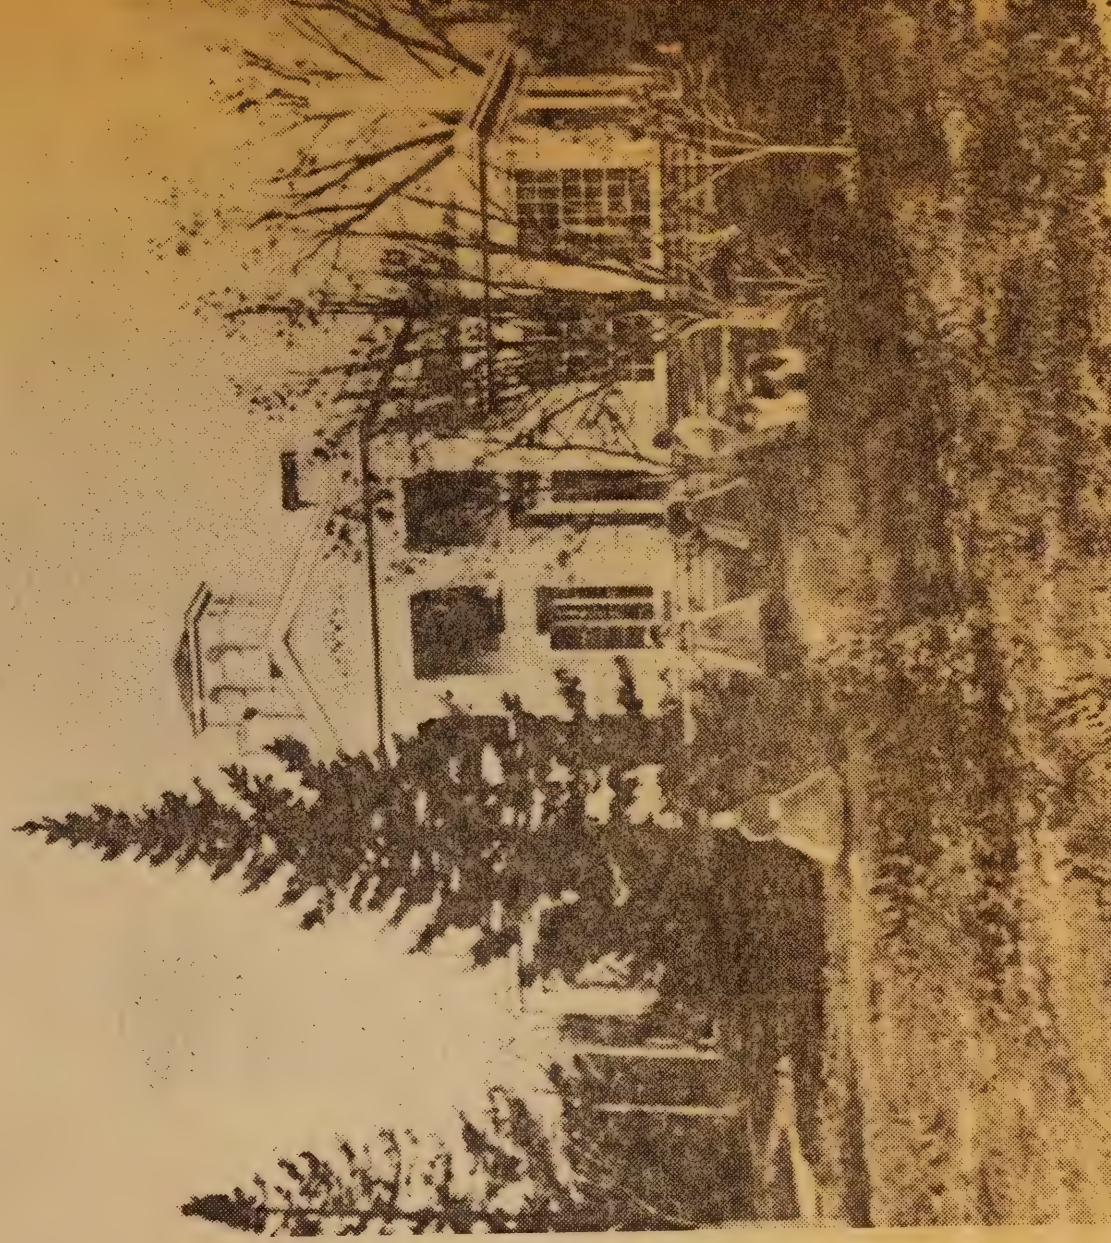

The first of several such houses built by Henry Williams, who was known as "the Southern Architect" of Fort Wayne, the McCulloch home was perfectly balanced. Four stately square columns in a Doric style defined the grand front portico. The main part of the house originally was a story and a half high, and had one-story wings, each the same size, built on the right and left sides. One of the wings was a greenhouse. Later in the 19th Century, the height of the mansion was increased to two stories and the square columns replaced with taller round ones.

The spacious property was surrounded by a white picket fence and the grounds were filled with fruit trees, pines, rose gardens, and grapes. Behind it all, were the sycamore trees along the banks of the St. Marys, near the ancient fishing site used for ages by the Indians who first lived in the area.

This was the grand home of Hugh McCulloch, one of the best known figures of early Fort Wayne. McCulloch, a native of Maine and a Boston-trained lawyer, came to the pioneer village of Fort Wayne in 1833 and quickly began to make his fortune. He became Judge of the Probate Court in 1834, and in 1835 he was named Cashier and Branch Manager in Fort Wayne of the newly formed State Bank of Indiana, despite his protest to the Board of Directors that he "had no practical knowledge whatever of banking." He came to like his new career so much, however, that he soon gave up the law (as being dull and uninteresting) and found himself on a tack that led to the most prominent banking positions in the nation.

Deeply active in his local community, McCulloch was named president of the new Bank of the State of Indiana in 1855 (this replaced the old "State Bank"), and he earned a national reputation during the desperate months of the financial panic of 1857 when he not only managed to save the state bank's charter, but he also saved the privately owned Hamilton Bank of Fort Wayne, of which he was a partner.

The peak of his career, however, came during the Civil War and in the decades following. In 1863, President Lincoln called McCulloch to accept the new position of Comptroller of the Currency, a position from which he launched the national banking system. Two years later, in 1865, Lincoln named McCulloch Secretary of the Treasury, a position he held in the administrations of Presidents Andrew Johnson (1865-1869) and Chester A. Arthur (in 1884).

But the history of the McCulloch home is more properly the center of an important part in the life of the extraordinary woman he married, Susan Marie Man.

Susan Man, also an easterner (from upstate New York), was born in 1818. She spent most of her childhood in Plattsburg, N.Y., a town founded by her pre-Revolutionary forefathers. As a young girl, she was sent away to the Hartford Female Seminary, in Connecticut, which had been established by Catherine Beecher, the sister of Harriet Beecher Stowe ("Uncle Tom's Cabin") and the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, two of America's foremost antislavery figures. Susan Man and her "school chums," as she called them, would be among the hundreds of teachers produced by the Beecher school determined to bring quality primary education to the pioneer west.

At the age of 18, Susan and her best friend, Alida Hubbell, were sought out personally by two of Fort Wayne's most distinguished pioneers, Samuel Hanna and Allen Hamilton, who came to New York to get permission from the women's parents to escort them back to teach in the village of Fort Wayne. The bargain was struck, and Susan Man has left us an intriguing account of her travels from the Erie Canal, across Lake Erie to Toledo, and up the Maumee to Fort Wayne.

Having arrived in Toledo, the young teachers "found that there was not a decent house in town." A stage, piloted by a colorful figure, carried them to the town of Maumee through a "magnificent primeval forest" where, at a cabin, they were thankful to get some cold meat and some bread. Two young men, the Hilton boys, were hired to take the women up the river to Fort Wayne in a 48-foot "pirogue" (dug-out canoe) while their escort, Alida Hubbell's brother, selected the "most promising cabin along the way to spend the night in. The food was "corn dodgers and fat bacon," but the boys cooked some black bass and perch.

Once in Fort Wayne, Susan found the small village charming, not least of all because she met young Hugh McCulloch her first evening in town. McCulloch was then head of the bank, and both Susan and Alida were "struck by the appearance of this gentleman, who was six feet tall, slender and well proportioned, with blue eyes and fair hair; his accent was that of a Bostonian."

During 1836, Susan and Alida started their school for girls, which was held in a room in "the old court house." Most of the girls were motherless and looked to the young teachers for advice. A boys' school was conducted in the same building by the Rev. Jessie Hoover, who had just come to Fort Wayne as the area's first Lutheran minister.

The next year, Alida was called back to her New York home and Susan Man accompanied her. Their escort this time was a very delighted Hugh McCulloch, who had business in Buffalo. At the point in the Maumee where everyone left the boats to take the stage for the 10-mile ride to Toledo, the women found the same colorful driver they had met a year before. Susan remembered that "the man who drove the stage sang Methodist tunes with a fine baritone voice, between times addressing his horses in profane expletives. He drove well over a very bad road, for they were cutting and excavating for the Wabash and Erie Canal," though at one point, to everyone's delight, a bad jolt threw a young ornately dressed army officer "of very small size" out of the stage and into the mud of the deeply rutted road.

A year later, on March 21, 1838, Susan and Hugh were married. When the couple returned to Fort Wayne, they were delighted to find yet again the same bartoned swearing Methodist at the reins of the stage from Toledo to Maumee.

After arriving in Fort Wayne, Susan and Hugh straightaway went to inspect the construction of their first home, a small but elegant brick building at the corner of Main and Clinton which was furnished by Hugh's bank. They found the work going well, though Susan was distressed to see the workmen spitting tobacco all over the new floor. The couple had to board for a while with the Fairfields (cousins of Hugh), but Susan found Mrs. Fairfield "a very disagreeable person and not at all honest."

The couple occupied this brick house, where two of their children were born, until 1843, when the mansion on Superior Street was completed. The house had been built "in the suburbs of the town" so that the children "would be better away from the streets of the village," and it was romantically situated "on a bank of the St. Marys River, near the spot where Charlevoix and the Jesuit Fathers encamped, and ... (where we) often found arrow heads and sometimes money with very ancient dates upon it."

For Susan McCulloch the two decades between 1843 and 1863 were very fondly remembered as idyllic times of quiet, elegant country living — enjoying the best that there could be in Fort Wayne before the Civil War. But in reality these years were never quite so quiet, for Susan McCulloch, like her husband, was caught up in the great events that swept the town, the state, and the nation.

During these years, Susan renewed her close friendship with the Beecher family, and supported the efforts of the Rev. Charles Beecher to become pastor of First Presbyterian Church. But because of factional disputes in the congregation, the attempt failed. Yet, at a gathering in the McCulloch home of great Beecher pastors, Lyman (the father) and Henry Ward (the abolitionist and brother of Charles), a new congregation was formed to become the Second Presbyterian Church, which today is Westminster Presbyterian Church, 2614 E. State Blvd.

On the state scene, the new Indiana constitution of 1851 allowed for the organization of a new state bank, which was duly chartered in 1855 with Hugh McCulloch as its president. Susan acted as assistant to her husband, helping him deal with the overwhelming tasks of president of the bank and head of the Fort Wayne branch. She became, for instance, expert at forging Hugh's signature which, by law, had to be on every note circulated by the bank and its 20 branches.

When the Civil War broke out in April 1861, Susan, like other Fort Wayne women, threw herself into the task of sustaining the northern war effort. "We got the news (about Confederate attacks on Fort Sumter) on Sunday," Susan recalled, "and on Monday morning I went to the stores and bought every yard there was of blue and gray flannel in the city of Fort Wayne." She then led a group of women brought together in the "town hall" to make blouses and overalls for the first companies that enlisted.

An entirely new chapter in the McCullochs' lives opened in 1863 when the family was called to Washington, and then in later years overseas to England. After the Civil War, Susan Man McCulloch seldom returned to Fort Wayne, where her son Charles maintained the family interests.

But she never forgot her home in early Fort Wayne where she raised her family and she and her husband laid the foundations for later prominence. Near to her death, in 1898, when compiling her "Recollections," among the most enduring memories was for her the "little paradise" on the St. Marys River. She always recalled how many flowers there were; today there are none.

The McCulloch House (about 1936, above, and 1956, below) housed the Fort Wayne College of Medicine from 1892-1905, was purchased by the Fort Wayne Turners in 1906 and later was owned by a realty company formed by Local 723 of International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. In 1978, Anthony Wayne Bank, which retained the mortgage on the house when the realty company filed for bankruptcy in 1976, decided the property over to ARCH, Inc., local preservationist group. ARCH still owns the property and is trying to market it.

The flamboyant R.T. McDonald, sold 'light' to city

Ronald McDonald was one of the most colorful and flamboyant businessmen in Fort Wayne before the turn of the century. Although widely known for his many showy investments, he made his fortune as the promoter and general manager of the Jenney Electric Co., the forerunner of the Fort Wayne General Electric Co.

McDonald came to Fort Wayne from Allegheny City, Pa., in 1860, and took up lodging in a boarding house on Hamilton Street. By 1864, he had joined the Union Army and saw service during the last year of the Civil War in West Virginia as a Sergeant Major of the 152nd Indiana Regiment. After the war, he took a job as a clerk in the Evans Drygoods Co. at the corner of Berry and Clinton streets. Within a decade, he had become a partner in the business, which was then called the Evans-McDonald Drygoods Co.

McDonald's wealth had grown considerably, and in 1874 he married Lillie Morse of Angola with the greatest show yet seen at a nuptial in Fort Wayne. In what became a typical display of extravagance, McDonald hired an entire train from the Jackson and Saginaw Railroad for the wedding party's trip to and from Angola, where the couple were joined.

The McDonalds eventually settled in the beautiful home at 924 W. Wayne St., which was built in 1886 by the leading local architects, John F. Wing and Marshall S. Mahurin. The design of this house is in the newly popular "Neo-Jacobean" style, which suited perfectly the personality of R.T. McDonald, with its pleasant irregularity, lack of symmetry and elaborate superficial decorations.

Seeking profitable opportunity at every turn, he was one of the several men who bought the entire section of the old Wabash and Erie Canal from the Indiana border to Lagro. This included the Feeder Canal in Fort Wayne, the water of which McDonald and his partners hoped to sell to the city to meet its needs for new sources of drinking water. Although this project ultimately failed, the investors later made a handsome profit when the right-of-way was sold to the city power company.

The beginnings of the Jenney Electric enterprise were accidental. James A. Jenney came to Fort Wayne from Ann Arbor, Mich., in 1881 to market his newly invented arc lamp, but he had met with little success. While a guest at the Aveline Hotel on the corner of Berry and Calhoun, Jenney's dinner table companion was John Riess, a clerk working for Ronald McDonald. Not knowing Jenney's business, Riess excitedly told Jenney about the wonderfully brilliant lighting that he had found installed in the Cleveland train station, and that these lights, he discovered, were known as "arc lights." To his complete surprise, Jenney announced that he had with him two such lights of his own invention and a small generator, or dynamo, to power them. Having failed to sell the idea to Fort Wayne, Jenney said he was leaving for Indianapolis in the morning.

Riess, kowing the enthusiasm his boss had for new ideas, convinced McDonald that very night to meet Jenney the next day. True to his image, McDonald was sold on the idea immediately, and a great demonstration was prepared at the Evans-McDonald warehouse on Berry Street. McDonald invited Mayor Charles Zollinger, the City Council, leading business figures, the newspapers and the public in general.

Before dark, large crowds began to gather on Berry Street near Clinton to attend "the unveiling of the marvel of the century," as it was billed.

The demonstration went without a hitch, and the crowds were stunned. When the Langley Dynamo was put into action and the arc lights came on, the warehouse was "made bright as the sun," according to the newspaper. It was well past midnight before all the curious could file through, guarding their eyes against the bright bluish glare.

With such a sure success in hand, McDonald staged another demonstration the next night. Especially impressed was the City Council which saw an opportunity for low cost, high performance street lighting.

Within weeks, McDonald led in the formation of the Jenney Electric Light Co., boasting as its president the great foundry master, John H. Bass. But McDonald was to be the general manager and treasurer; from this position in the company he undertook to promote the new arc light with all the energy and abandon of the circus master, P.T. Barnum.

The arc light was a recent invention that produced the brightest of all the new artificial light sources.

These early lamps burned with the equivalence of 2,000 candles, or 133 gas lights. First demonstrated as a workable light in 1809, by the Englishman Sir Humphrey Davy, who passed electricity through two charcoal sticks several inches apart causing a bright arc of electricity, the first installation of an improved arc lamp in America was not until 1879.

In that year, Charles F. Brush created the Cleveland lighting display that had been witnessed by McDonald's agent, John Riess. James Jenney's importance at this same moment lay both in his invention of a foolproof and economical arc light (others were too expensive to make easily, sputtered and went out) and his successful use of a vastly superior generator invented by his friend, Professor William Langley of the University of Michigan.

The new firm of Jenney Electric hired James Jenney and his son Charles (also an electronic wizard), and moved into its modest first factory in the 100 block of west Superior Street, next to the old Wabash and Erie Canal (today's railroad tracks).

Immediately successful, the company won a contract with the city of Fort Wayne to light a large portion of downtown. The next year, in 1882, the company moved to larger quarters. In 1884, McDonald managed a promoter's dream and won the contract to handle all outdoor lighting for the World's Fair in New Orleans. Borne on these successes, the company finally settled, in 1886, in the old Gaus Mowing Machine factory on Broadway, at the southern edge of town on the spot where the present General Electric plant stands.

To the great delight of McDonald, the company attracted Marmaduke Marcellus Slattery, a wizard in generator and battery innovations, from Massachusetts. Among his first accomplishments was harnessing a superior battery, known as the "Slattery Battery," to a small motor on a large tricycle. Driving to and from work on his motorized bike — the first artificially powered vehicle in Fort Wayne — Slattery caused a daily hubbub in town and was a Pied Piper for scores of children.

More sensational yet, Slattery harnessed his powerful batteries to a motor geared to drive one of the horse-drawn trolleys of the Fort Wayne Street Railway Co.

On Nov. 11, 1891, a load of passengers was carried by electric motor, for the first time, from the Broadway

A patent was received for this Jenney arc light on July 25, 1882. Pictured are two plain arc lamps, one a single, the other a double version. As reported in 1883 by the Louisville Courier-Journal, "Principal feature is its bright white light and its steadiness. It neither flickers nor goes out as do the Brush and other lights."

MCDONALD From 3S way factory $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles along the "belt line," to Main, Calhoun and Creighton streets. The trouble was, the batteries needed such frequent recharging that the long haul was not very practical. Though something of a failure, the experiment made clear the value of electrically powered mass transportation, and by early the next year, in March 1892, the Fort Wayne trolleys were harnessed to electricity (but not produced by batteries).

McDonald traveled from town to town selling arc light systems and the company's newly devised steel towers and flexible arm lamp posts. Usually he would herald his coming by hiring local bands and holding a parade, which, like a scene out of the musical show "The Music Man," would lead the town population to a central square for a prepared demonstration. A bombastic sales pitch and a brilliant display usually left the city fathers with a profound sense of need and McDonald with a substantial contract.

Quick to seize every promotional opportunity, McDonald jumped at the chance to use the Jenney lights at a baseball game. On June 3, 1883, McDonald set up 27 arc lights along the fence around the Calhoun Street baseball park (north of Superior). When the Methodist College team took the field against the Quincy (Ill.) Professionals that evening the arc lights turned night into day and launched the first night baseball game, an event which, much to the great satisfaction of R.T. McDonald, attracted national attention in the press.

According to the Journal, "the scene was a brilliant and novel one, the grandstand crowded to overflowing, was as light as midday and the elegant attire of the ladies showed to good advantage." As to the ball game, the out-of-town sports writers noted that "the illumination was such that the game was played well, although an alarming number of strikes were called by Umpire Morrissey." The Quincy Professionals won in seven innings, 19 to 11, and again the hometown paper noted that "in brilliancy and splendor, the spectacle was a great success, but as a specimen of ball playing, it was a very poor one."

Despite all this promotional splendor, McDonald's tactics often led to overextension of production and excessive spending of capital reserves. Competition from other companies, such as the old Brush Electric of Cleveland, also increased the financial difficulties of the company. Jenney Electric had an excellent product, but McDonald's aggressive sales efforts too often exhausted profits.

In 1888, in an effort to save the company, McDonald negotiated the sale of the business to the Thompson-Houston Co. of Lynn, Mass., and the name of the firm was changed from Jenney Electric to the more prosaic Fort Wayne Electric Light Co.

A great fire then destroyed the factory later that same year, but with the help of the new parent company it was rebuilt on an even grander scale by the end of 1889. In that year, Thompson-Houston bought Jenney's old competitor, Brush Electric, and thereby became as large a company as the great Edison General Electric Co., then the largest in the world.

It was at this point that McDonald, anxious about the failing health of both Jenney and Slattery, convinced James J. Wood, an electrical genius from Brooklyn, N.Y., to join the company in 1890. Before the year was out, McDonald established the Fort Wayne factory and its new "Wood System of Arc Lighting" as a national leader.

In 1892, Thompson-Houston merged with Edison General Electric to form the great corporation of the General Electric Co. But during this period, the Fort Wayne operation was known by the more neighborly distinction of "The Lights." This was because of the great outdoor nighttime testing area where dozens of arc lamps were hung every night, lighting the southern sky of Fort Wayne with their bluish carbon glow.

The years after this great merger of electric companies, during the depression caused by the financial panic of 1893, were disastrous for Ronald McDonald. Despite his best efforts, he could not overcome staggering indebtedness, and in 1894, the Fort Wayne Electric Co. went into receivership, only to re-emerge after reorganization as the Fort Wayne Electric Corp. But debts continued to be a problem until McDonald died, in 1898. To save the company, General Electric intended to move the Fort Wayne operation to the parent home of Schenectady, N.Y. But the ardent efforts of James Wood convinced the home office to allow the company to stay in Fort Wayne, where it has remained since, as the Fort Wayne Works of the General Electric Co.

Cityscapes: A necktie party

The News-Sentinel's time machine this week takes us back nearly 100 years to the most famous "necktie party" in the city's history.

Samuel McDonald, 30, was hanged in the courtyard of the old county jail at 1:27 p.m. on Oct. 9, 1883. The Fort Wayne Gazette the next morning gave considerable details of the hanging, which allegedly was witnessed by some 15,000 people even though just 250 tickets were issued.

The Gazette reported the execution was efficiently conducted and that McDonald "died like a man."

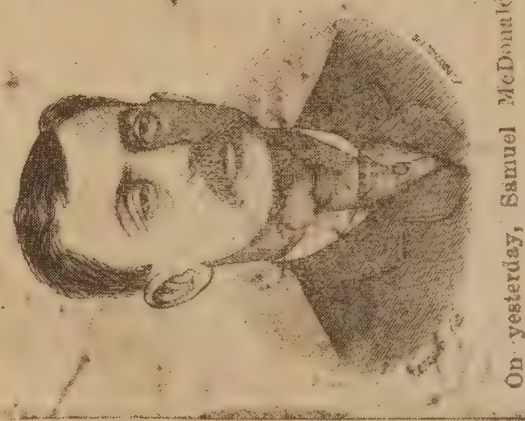

Here's why, according to The Gazette, McDonald finally met his end at the end of a rope: On March 23, 1883, McDonald killed a man named Louis Laurent. McDonald and Laurent had both been hired to clear some farmland near Arcola.

After being paid one night, they went to a local bar. When Laurent left, it was the last time he was seen — alive at least.

A few days later, McDonald turned up at a Fort Wayne pawn shop, wanting money for a shotgun which had been owned by Laurent. The authorities grew suspicious, but McDonald told them Laurent was simply away visiting relatives.

The condemned man.

On March 29, Laurent's body was found in a cabin on the farm near Arcola. His forehead had a hole in it, and a blood-stained hatchet was found near his corpse. In a pile of straw, a pawn ticket was found linking McDonald to the crime. Boot heel imprints in the ground also marked McDonald as the killer.

McDonald was routinely convicted, although he remained confident almost to the end his death sentence would be commuted by the governor. No such mercy came, and the crowd gathered early on Oct. 9 to witness the end of "poor Mac," as The Gazette called him.

Although the newspaper reported McDonald died an easy death, such was not the case. When the gallows trap was sprung, his neck was merely dislocated, not broken. McDonald dangled in mid-air for 17 minutes while he slowly strangled to death.

McDonald's last words were "Gentlemen, I have nothing to say. I only hope you will forgive me."

He might have had more to say if he had known the tickets to his hanging had mispelled his name. It must be local history's ultimate "insult to injury" that his name was spelled Samuel McDanel on the death passes.

The hatchet used on Laurent and the noose used on McDonald are in the possession of the Allen County-Fort Wayne Historical Society. The Fort Wayne Gazette used for this story was supplied by Ed Archibald of Harlan. ■

JAMES M. McKAY, CO-FOUNDER OF G. E. BURSLEY CO.

James Marshall McKay (1856-1917), born in Ingersoll, Can., came here with his parents, Mr. & Mrs. Neil McKay, in 1869, and later became associated with his father in railroad contracting business, and then together they operated a retail grocery. In 1887, the son, in partnership with Gilbert E. Bursley, established the firm of G. E. Bursley & Co., which became a leading wholesaler of food products in Northern Indiana.

The Bursley firm was located at Clinton and Superior and in 1957 merged with the Bluffton Grocery Co., which formed the Food Marketing Corp. The success of the Bursley Company was attributed largely to Mr. McKay's merchandising ingenuity.

Mr. McKay was active in community affairs and was an elder at Presbyterian Church. He rests in Lindenwood, where full modern cemetery facilities will always be available.

Prayer

Lord make me an instrument of Thy peace; where there is hatred, let me sow love; where there is injury, pardon; where there is doubt, faith; where there is despair, hope; where there is darkness, light;
and where there is sadness, joy.

O Divine Master, grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled as to console; to be understood, as to understand; to be loved, as to love; for it is in giving that we receive, it is in pardoning that we are pardoned, and it is in dying that we are born to eternal life.

THE Lord is my shepherd;
I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul: he lead-eth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death,
I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil: my cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

Dear Al:

Enclosed are the forms you recently sent for further family information. Sure hope that what I have filled out will be of some help in your most worth while project.

I know so little about the Merz family other than the very immediate that it is pathetic. Have heard my mother speak of you many times, but don't ever remember having the pleasure of meeting you.

If I can be of any further help, give me a call at my home 745-4244.

RUTH

2A FORT WAYNE NEWS-SENTINEL

Sat., July 3, 1976

Her Ancestor Was Declaration Signer

Perhaps Ruth Messerschmidt has some of the best reasons of all to celebrate the Bicentennial.

When July 4 rings in on Sunday, Mrs. Messerschmidt, of 2937 Westbrook Drive, will again vividly remember her ancestor, John Morton, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence who turned the tide of the vote in Pennsylvania.

Not only is she happy about her heritage, but also because she will serve as secretary and librarian of the national headquarters of The Friend Family of America Historical Pioneers, which is now being established.

Mrs. Messerschmidt comes from a long line of Friends. Morton, she explained, was the grandson of Capt. Nicholas Friend, who came from Weymouth, England, to settle in what is now Chester, Pa.

Five delegates from Pennsylvania were present that fateful day the question of independence was to be decided in Philadelphia. Two of the men voted yes; two of the men, no.

Because of John Morton, Mrs. Messerschmidt said, the vote became 3-2 for independence and the declaration was adopted.

Morton, it is reported in a booklet on the Friend family, "was censured by some of his friends for his boldness in casting his vote for the Declaration of Independence."

But his conscience remained clear. And, on his deathbed, Morton said: "Tell them they will live to see the hour when they acknowledge it (his vote) to have been the most glorious service of my life."

Morton died in April, 1777, before the effects of the declaration could be known.

But Mrs. Messerschmidt and many other descendants of the Friend family are working to keep the family's heritage alive.

The organization, which claims English, German, and Scotch descendants, is headed by Lester D. Friend, Sr., of Warren, O. He has announced the formation of a special committee to formulate a constitution and by-laws for the National Society of Friends.

Fort Wayne has been tapped as the organization's national headquarters and Mrs. Messerschmidt will operate a genealogy library on the family in her home.

Friend hopes to establish a chapter of Friends in each state, Mrs. Messerschmidt said.

Persons interested in more information about the Friend society and its research are asked to contact Mrs. Messerschmidt.

UPFRONT CITYSCAPES

Methodist college originally school for girls

By DICK ISENHOUR

Of The News-Sentinel

Fort Wayne in the 1840s was a city determined to meet the educational needs of its citizens. It was with this in mind that one of centers of education in northeastern Indiana was born.

During the years just before 1846, several folks from Fort Wayne were working with the Indiana Methodist Episcopal Conference to establish a college in the city.

At a Methodist Conference session in LaPorte in September 1846, the plans were finalized. The session, presided over by Samuel Bigsger, former governor of Indiana, decided it would build a college on grounds donated by one of Fort Wayne's prominent citizens, William Rockhill.

The site was at the end of West Wayne Street, which in those days butted into College Street.

The proposal to establish a college here drew immediate support from several groups. David H. Colerick, John W. Dawson and George Johnson, stalwarts of the community, drafted a resolution giving the support of the legal community.

A group of equally civic-minded citizens was formed to prepare building plans. It included Samuel Edsall, P.H. Taylor, Hugh McCulloch, Henry Rudisill, J.B. Hanna and John Hough Jr.

The cornerstone of the main building was laid on June 19, 1847.

In the beginning, the school was known as the Fort Wayne Female College and, as you might have guessed, its students were young ladies.

In 1852, the Fort Wayne Collegiate Institute for men was formed nearby. Soon after, the two schools united as Fort Wayne College, but it was more commonly called the Methodist College.

Not much is recorded concerning the early enrollment of the school, but it is known that in 1854, there were 256 students, 97 of them men. Historians note that between 1850 and 1860, the college was one of the most highly-regarded institutes in northeast Indiana.

One of its most prominent students during this period was Henry Lawton, who enrolled in the school in 1858. Following the outbreak of the Civil War, Lawton began a military career that made him one of the city's most famous soldiers.

After the war, Lawton fought Gerónimo in the Indian wars, and the Spanish in Cuba where he was killed by a guerrilla sharpshooter.

Late in the 1800s, hard economic times befell the college. In 1893, the school closed its doors and the campus was moved to Upland, Ind., where it is now known as Taylor University.

Methodist College, built around 1847, was located at the end of Wayne Street at College Avenue. It originally was a women's college; later, in 1893, it was moved to Upland, where it became Taylor University. Between 1850 and 1860, the college was one of the most highly regarded institutes in northeast Indiana.

City one of earliest Methodist centers

1984: 200th anniversary

This year marks the 200th anniversary of organized Methodism in North America, and Fort Wayne is one of the earliest Methodist centers.

A 10-story pylon, with its carillon of four bronze bells, marks the First Wayne Street United Methodist Church, at 300 E. Wayne St., and is a fitting symbol of the 160-year Methodist tradition in Fort Wayne. It is especially fitting because First Wayne represents the reunion, since 1968, of two of the city's oldest congregations, which had been formed in 1849 from a division of the original Methodist church here.

Methodist preachers were in Fort Wayne as early as 1824. That year, the Rev. James Holman came from Boston to join his brother, Joseph, who was "Receiver of Public Monies in the old building known as the Fort." James settled on a farm just west of the St. Mary's River, where he preached the first Methodist sermon in the area.

Another brother, the Rev. William Holman, also came to preach briefly in Fort Wayne in about 1825. A "class" of five was the entire Methodist congregation.

Fort Wayne was then only a missionary station, and in 1830 it was governed by the Maumee Mission of the Ohio Conference. In 1834, the Indiana Conference was formed, with Fort Wayne as a mission and center of the large northern Indiana Circuit that included Logansport and South Bend. Black-clad circuit-riding preachers made their way from one settlement to the next, sometimes preaching from horseback and always zealous in spreading the gospel.

Not all were trained clergy; indeed, most were uneducated and some were illiterate. But because there was an abundance of these zealots, the Methodists, like the Baptists, grew more rapidly on the frontier than other more sophisticated denominations, such as the Presbyterians and the Congregationalists.

Mission grew stable

Under the pastorate of the Rev. James Harrison, from 1834 to 1836, the mission in Fort Wayne strove to become more stable and build a church. The leading layman, Samuel Edsall, persuaded the Ewing brothers, George and William, to give the Methodist Circuit a lot on West Main Street on the condition that a church be built there (just west of Webster Street, on the south side on Main).

But the chore proved to be too much. Only the frame was raised by 1837 when the funds ran out; the next year a roof was put on, but again the funds were not sufficient to finish the job. The building remained in this condition until 1840 when it was abandoned altogether. During these years the Methodists, like many other Protestant denominations, used the Presbyterian schoolhouse for their meetings.

What conflict plagued the young congregation is not clear — perhaps it was the site itself or, more likely, a lack of organization and strong leadership. At any rate, in 1840, under the talented Rev. Jacob Colcleazer and a new board of trustees, a church was quickly erected at Berry and Harrison streets, and was known as the Berry Street (or First) Methodist Church. With this church, Fort Wayne became a regular station with a resident minister.

In the nine years that followed, the First Methodist Church was served by one minister after another. Some were well-trained, like George M. Boyd and the outstanding Samuel Brenton (who went on to serve in Congress), while others like Amasa Johnson and Howly Bears were . . . well, vigorous, at the least.

In 1849, the Indiana Conference ordered that the congregation be split, with Harrison Street as the dividing line. The Berry Street church continued to serve those east of Harrison while a new church, West Wayne Street Methodist, was built at the corner of Wayne and Broadway (dedicated in 1850). More than a century later, in 1968, these two congregations were joined again in the First Wayne Street United Methodist Church.

The reason for the division of the congregation in 1849 was the growth in the number of west-end Methodists due to the recent establishment of the Fort Wayne Female College, the forerunner of today's Taylor University in Upland.

Originally anti-intellectual, the attitude of American Methodism toward education began to change in the 1830s, and by 1845, 59 Methodist educational institutions had been established. One of the most successful of these was Indiana Asbury College in Greencastle, which later became DePauw University (in 1884). This was a men's school, and in 1845 the Indiana Methodist Conference determined to have a woman's school also. Bids were solicited from various towns in Indiana for the site.

The city of Fort Wayne, led by William Rockhill, Sam Edsall, Joseph Edgerton, and ex-governor Samuel Bigger, offered $13,000 in cash and three acres of land for the campus. The land, donated by Rockhill, was located at the west end of Wayne Street, with 500 feet of river frontage.

In 1847, 15 trustees were appointed, advertisements for students were printed, articles of incorporation were secured, and one of the largest buildings then in Fort Wayne was erected. This structure measured 160 by 80 feet and was four stories high. The central building housed the recitation halls (classrooms), offices and chapel; the two wings had rooms for as many as 100 boarders.

School began in the fall of 1847 with 100 students. The tuition was $22.50 per year for a student enrolled in the college division (reduced rates were charged for lesser programs), and boarding students had to pay an additional $1.25 per week.

Curriculum traditional

The curriculum was traditional, with a required program of large amounts of Latin and Greek (which provided all the necessary materials for history, ethics, philosophy, and literature because the ancient classics, of course, contained "eternal truths and values," according to the college catalog). Mathematics also was a must for "it disciplined the thinking." Essential, too, were courses in drawing, penmanship, and music. In addition, the president of the college taught the "Moral Philosophy Course," which was the most popular for it gave the student the greatest range of study and discussion, from ethics and economics to religion and sociology.

Soon after the college was opened, discussion began on whether to make the school co-educational. In September 1850, the school enrolled its first male students, although they were treated as a separate division known as the Collegiate Institute for Men. This men's division was formally incorporated as a separate school in 1853, and two years later, the male and female colleges were united under the name of the Fort Wayne College (popularly called the Methodist College).

Lawton notable student

Among the most notable students in these years before the Civil War, when the college enrollment was as high as 300, was Henry W. Lawton. The 6-foot-4 student became a career soldier and a model hero of the later 19th century. He fought in many of the major campaigns of the Civil War, winning the Congressional Medal of Honor, and in the 1880s was instrumental in securing the surrender of the Indian leader Geronimo. A general by the time of the Spanish-American War, Lawton was killed in the Philippines in 1899.

The Fort Wayne College differed from a modern college in that most of the students were enrolled in preparatory and even grammar-level programs. Very few were graduated with college degrees. There were programs in teacher training (or "normal" programs), business, and music. The most common degree, however, was the MEL, or Mistress of English literature.

College life was strictly regulated. Daily attendance at chapel, Sunday worship, and a weekly "Singspiration," were all required. Smoking, chewing, drinking, Sunday work (or fishing), card-playing, dancing, "roaming the fields," and frequenting downtown Fort Wayne were forbidden. Ladies might "receive calls" only in the dormitory parlor in the presence of a faculty member. Close faculty supervision of student life was expected, for the teachers and administrators were viewed as parents for the students away from home.

One student, a product of the Methodist African missionary work, especially touched Fort Wayne and the college. Prince Kaboo of the western Liberian nation of Kru was born in 1873 and suffered as a child in the local tribal wars.

Coming under the missionary influence of a Miss Knolls, a former student of the Fort Wayne college, Kaboo was converted and took the Christian name of Samuel Morris, in recognition of a Fort Wayne banker who supported the Libe-rian mission.

Determined to be educated in a Methodist school, Morris came to the United States and entered Fort Wayne College in 1892. He had a charming personality and a zealous religious vocation, which quickly made him one of the best-liked students at the college. But the next year "Sammy Morris," as he was called, became ill and died. The funeral at First Methodist Church where he worshipped "was one of the largest ever witnessed in Fort Wayne," with a hundred having to wait outdoors.

The touching story of Samuel Morris' conversion, his zeal for education, and his untimely end was widely told and attracted numerous new students and large donations to the college.

Because the college had been in serious financial trouble throughout the late 1880s, and, since 1890, had been taken over by the National Association of Local Preachers, the legacy of Samuel Morris became crucial to the survival of the school. When Fort Wayne College closed in 1894 and moved to Upland to begin its new life as Taylor University, one of its first two buildings was named Samuel Morris (Prince Kaboo) Hall.

True to the strong Methodist tradition of service in the community, as the college was leaving Fort Wayne, another major Methodist institution began: Hope Hospital, at Barr and Washington streets, was the forerunner of today's Parkview Memorial Hospital.

I.U. Selects Dr. Irwin as Chancellor

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—Dr. Glenn W. Irwin, dean of the Indiana University medical school, was named chancellor of Indiana-Purdue at Indianapolis today by I.U. trustees.

Dr. Irwin succeeds retiring Dr. Maynard K. Hine, who assumed the post in 1969 when the two universities merged their Indianapolis facilities. Indiana U. is charged with administration of the big campus.

The trustees voted to change the name of 87-year-old Normal College of the American Gymnastics Union to the Indiana University school of physical education. The Indianapolis institution has been a part of I.U. since 1941. It is the oldest school in the country specializing in teaching physical education instructors.

Dr. Vernon J. Shiner Jr. was named dean of arts and science on the Bloomington campus succeeding Dr. George W. Wason, who will return to teaching and research. Dr. Shiner has been on the I.U. faculty since 1952 and previously headed department in 1962.

The trustees received a preliminary report that fall enrollments total 64,795 on the I.U. campuses for an overcrease of one-half of percent. The IUPUI campus had 16,885 students, an increase of 894 over last year. The Bloomington campus had a decrease of 600.

O gentlest heart of Jesus, ever present in the Blessed Sacrament, ever consumed with burning love for the poor captive souls, have mercy on the soul of thy departed servant.
Be not severe in Thy judgment but let some drops of Thy Precious Blood fall upon the devouring flames, and do Thou O Merciful Saviour, send Thy Angels to conduct Thy departed servant to a place of refreshment, light and peace. Amen.

May the souls of all the faithful

Goldia And William Miser And Their Deed

The Misers' Hoosier Homestead Part of the Family Since 1838

By JOANNE GATES
Regional Correspondent
WATERLOO — William and Goldia Miser have lived on their farm on County Road 22, Waterloo, since they were married in 1918. But the history of the Miser farm dates back much further than that.

Recently honored as a Hoosier Homestead, the farm is believed to have been in the Miser family since 1838. Many of the old records were destroyed in the DeKalb County Courthouse fire in 1912.

Martin Boley, Miser's great-grandfather, bought the farm at a private sale between 1838-40. The first white settler to settle in the area had been John Holton in 1833.

Miser's grandmother was born in the farmhouse in 1849. When she married, her husband, Frank N. Miser, bought the rights to the land, just over 64 acres.

The farm was then passed along to Miser's parents, Charles and Mattie Miser, until he and his wife took possession.

One unique point about the Hoosier Homestead Farm is the fact that the farm has always been occupied by a member of the same family. It has never been rented.

"I think this house was built in 1884 by my grandparents," Miser said. "My father's youngest brother was born in it and he's still living at 93."

Miser, who is 80, also was born in this house.

The Misers have seen many changes in their lifetime.

"Things are just different now," Goldia Miser began. "Used to be you just did your work and didn't go so many places. But I guess I'm just as tired now at night as I was then."

"There was the coming of electricity, instead of oil lamps and wood burning stoves. And the children used to walk three miles a day to school."

The couple have three daughters, Dorothy Laub and Mary Beatty, both of Butler, and Gloria Whetstone, Antwerp, O. One of their grandchildren, Kathy McNeerney, also lives in Butler.

Work on the farm has changed through the years too.

"I remember getting my first tractor in about 1922," Miser recalled. "Used it for the heavy work. I kept horses on the farm until 1944."

Miser farmed his ground until about 13 years ago when his eyesight began going bad. He has a tenant farmer now.

Miser planted corn, wheat and oats and always had a dairy herd until the '50s. After that, beef cattle, hogs and chickens were his only animals.

"There's a difference in the feeding of the animals now," Mrs. Miser commented. "There was less confinement years ago, and so much commercial feed is used now."

The Misers still plant a garden, and keep up the lawn themselves.

"We want to keep away from a rest home as long as we can," Goldia Miser said.

Miser's reaction to inflation was simple.

"It's crazy," he said. "But, it's a worldwide trend and I guess we'll have to go with it."

"I can remember when we sold cases of eggs at 9 cents a dozen," Mrs. Miser said.

"And, I got $5 a bushel for wheat before we were married, when today we're lucky if we get $3," Miser added. "There was not near the spread between the price farmers got and the price people paid in the store."

"We also didn't have near the grocery bill then that we do now, because we made so many things of our own," Mrs. Miser added.

The Misers still have their original deed to the property, written on a piece of sheepskin back in the mid 1800s. The farm the document lays claim to has seen its share of changes also.

But the Misers remain proud of their achievements and memories. Like Goldia Miser said, "We're not ashamed of our ages... age will come to all of us."

MOFFATT

1ST PRESBYTERIAN PASTOR 31 YEARS

Dr. David W. Moffatt (1835-1920) was one of the First Presbyterian Church's distinguished ministers. He served this church from 1875, until retirement from the ministry, January 1, 1906.

It was during his 31 years at First Presbyterian that the congregation built its fourth $100,000 edifice at Washington and Clinton, following the spectacular fire that destroyed its church at Clinton and Berry, December 16, 1882. The congregation is now in its Colonial style edifice at Wayne and Webster.

Dr. Moffatt, born in Morris County, N.J., came with his parents to Madison, Ind., in 1836, where he attended school. He was graduated by Hanover College and Princeton Theological Seminary. Before coming to Fort Wayne, he was pastor of Georgetown, D.C., Presbyterian Church. Dr. Moffatt rests in Lindenwood Cemetery which is now included in the National Register of Historic Places.

City aims to unravel mystery of tombstones

When you clean out the garage, you never know what you will find — or so the city discovered when it unearthed five old grave markers buried in a pile of rubble at the old police garage.

No one knows, apparently, exactly how long the tombstones have been stored in the garage, but Ladonna Huntley, city public affairs officer, estimated Thursday they must have been in the garage at least 10 years.

Dating as far back as 1868, the markers were discovered during cleanup operations in preparation for demolition of the Berry Street structure.

According to police garage spokesmen, putting gravestones on the doorsteps of friends was once a popular prank among teen-agers. Persons who were objects of the pranks usually sought the aid of police in disposing of the markers. Although police held them for safe-keeping, they were never claimed.

Efforts to contact individuals with the same last names as those on the tombstones, in hopes of aiding in the return of the markers to their proper locations, did not solve the mystery.

The fact that the newest tombstone is dated 1909 has increased the problem for officials.

Names on the markers and the dates of death are Sarah Morton, May 27, 1868; Paula Gabler, Aug. 4, 1909; Rachel Smead, 1888; and Elijah Browning, Sept. 27, 1869. The fifth marker bears no date but is inscribed "Corp. John H. Cook, Co. C, 88 Ind. Inf."

If the markers are not claimed, Mrs. Huntley said they will be offered to the Fort Wayne Historical Society, which plans to occupy Old City Hall.

The police garage is being demolished to provide parking for the historical society building.

Decade-old vandalism undone

Pioneers rest again

By DELL FORD

Sarah and Jared are together again. Since the late 1860s, Sarah Morton's limestone grave marker had stood by that of her husband Jared's.

No one knows for certain, but about 10 years ago Sarah's tombstone disappeared from the family burial plot on shaded high ground overlooking the St. Marys River in Marion Township.

Suspecting that whoever spirited Sarah's stone from the secluded riverside plot might take a notion to come get Jared's, too, Flora Karr did the only sensible thing. She had Jared's marker removed, for safekeeping, to a shed on the one-time homestead.

(Since Jared migrated from Preble County, Ohio, to Allen County, Indiana, in the early 1800s and received title to 47.56 acres of land in Marion Township via a grant signed by President Andrew Jackson, only two other families have owned the property. Raymond and Flora Karr purchased the acreage from the Slopenhagen family. The Karrs deeded the property to their only child, Joan, now Mrs. Donald Bredemeyer.)

For 10 years, Jared languished in the shed and Sarah's whereabouts remained a mysterious unknown.

Until Friday, June 23.

That's the day Joan Bredemeyer read a Journal-Gazette account about five markers that had found their way to the Fort Wayne Police Department Garage. So far as anyone knows, the tombstones had been in the garage at least a decade and were discovered amid rubble only when the garage was being cleaned out as a prelude to razing.

The newspaper story listed the marker names and dates of death. One was "Sarah Morton, May 27, 1868."

Joan Bredemeyer, keen on the history of her country property, had no doubt it was the Sarah Morton who belonged with Jared Morton. Her happy reaction, she said, was "Sarah's been found!"

On Wednesday, June 28, she went to the Police Garage to claim Sarah's tombstone. The following day, with the aid of her daughters and a little red wagon, she returned Jared's marker to the high ground burial plot and placed it against a tree. The going wasn't easy. She and her daughters had to carve a path, perhaps the equivalent of two city blocks, over uneven ground and through knee-high weeds.

Friday, June 30, was a special day. At 9 a.m., Mrs. Bredemeyer and her daughters (Kathleen, Heidi and Joy) hefted Sarah's tombstone into the same little red wagon and once again made the bumpy trip through weeds and hungry mosquitoes to the tiny Morton cemetery.

What made the return of Sarah's marker to the riverside cemetery so special was the encouragement accompanying the Bredemeyers.

The William Boyd Mortons (he's a direct descendant of Sarah and Jared) drove over from Hoagland for the reunion. Mrs. Frank (Bertha) Morton came from nearly Poe with her daughter Bernice Morton Spear. Mrs. John (Mildred) Morton got permission to leave her banking job in Hoagland to join the group. Mrs. Esther Brede-meyer, Joan's mother-in-law, also was there.

The sun was inching toward its zenith, adding to the burden of the walk, "back in." But at the spot where Jared awaited Sarah, oaks and elms curtained out the sunlight and cooled the little clearing. A blanket of orange lilies, so thick, Joan said, that "they no longer bloom," surrounded the burial plot.

Assisted by Kathleen, Joan eased Jared's marker from its resting place against an elm and set it on the base stone. Then they lifted Sarah's marker from the wagon and placed it on the base next to Jared's.

Jared's tombstone says he died April 7, 1836, at "age 39, 6 mo, 25 days." Sarah's that she died "May 27, 1868, age 57."

Before leaving the little cemetery, where 2-year-old Matthew Morton also is buried, Bertha Morton quietly placed three field daisies in front of the tombstones of Sarah and Jared.

Hidden as it is from all the world, how would anyone know of the burial plot and the markers which have been there for more than a century?

Joan Bredemeyer can only guess. "Kids who grew up in the area," she said, "know. And tell their friends. And there's a lot of fishing in the river."

Java price takes tumble around world

NEW YORK (AP) — A said it was studying the cut in coffee prices by Brazil, the world's largest producer, sent bean prices downward on commodities markets Monday but it was too soon to tell whether the decrease would reach supermarkets.

The price of coffee futures tumbled 6 cents a pound on the London exchange and 4 cents on the New York market in reaction to Saturday's announcement that Brazil, which supplies a third of the world's coffee, had cut its export price by 10 cents a pound to $1.50.

Most U.S. coffee producers were closed for the July 4 holiday and could not be reached for comment. Folgers, a subsidiary of Proctor & Gamble, be down to $3 a pound in Considering the pioneer heritage of the place, plus historical reference to the fact Little Turtle had a summer campground close by, Joan envies a park on at least a portion of the old Morton homestead where Sarah and Jared's log cabin still stands as part of a more modern dwelling.

Whether or not a park becomes reality, the Mortons are together again. Sarah and Jared. Surrounded by orange lilies on a high bank of the St. Marys River.
